CONGREGATION ETZ CHAIM

The word used in Hebrew for Charity is Tzedakah. The Hebrew word has a much wider connotation than simply giving money to the poor. It reflects the concepts of justice, kindness and honesty integral to the norms of behavior expected in one's dealings with other people. The implication is that the giving of charity embodies all the elements of upright behavior that marks out the righteous person.

It is, therefore, not surprising that the act of Tzedakah is regarded as basic mitzvah- obligation - and is mentioned numerous times in Jewish literature. The Book of Proverbs (10,2; 11,4) tells us that Tzedakah Tatzil Mimavet - Charity (and charitable acts) delivers one from death - and giving charity, say the Rabbis, is one of the methods of "averting the evil decree" (Babylonian Talmud, tractate Rosh HaShanah).

Since time immemorial, the Jew has donated to charity in memory of a deceased relative, and it is particularly appropriate to do so before the ritual of Yizkor,

When those family members are no longer amongst us are remembered. On the mystical level, we are told that the performance of this vital mitzvah has the power to elevate the soul of the deceased, but a more tangible explanation is given in the work entitled Sefer Chasidim (Book of the Saintly) by Rabbi Yehudah the Chasid of Regensburg who lived at the end of the twelfth century. Sefer Chasidim asks: "How can the merits of one person be credited to another person after his death?" It explains as follows: If a parent instructs a child to learn and to carry out good deeds, then, since the rewards that the child gains for doing these things come about because of the parent's instruction, the child is able to have these actions credited to the parent. In other words, when we give Tzedakah in memory of deceased relatives, their souls are elevated.

The Yizkor prayers indeed include an undertaking to give a donation to charity in memory of the deceased. Just as in Temple times, visitors to Jerusalem were obliged to give what they could afford to the Temple funds so, too, we pledge to make our own donation to charity. By performing this mitzvah in the name of the deceased, we share the credit with them and enhance the status of their memory.

May their memories be for a blessing.
